Questions 11-14

La Niña* is a weather (11) that happens in the Pacific Ocean* every few years. It is the opposite of El Niño*. The name La Niña comes from Spanish. It means “The Girl.” El Niño means “(12)”. La Niña has worldwide effects* on the weather. Weather depends a lot on ocean (13). In the Pacific Ocean, the sun makes the water very warm. (14), clouds form easily and more rain falls. Sometimes, winds push the warm water to the west. The warm water blows from South America to Indonesia*. When the warm water blows west, cold water from the bottom of the ocean goes up to the top, and then La Niña shows up. When La Niña comes, the sea top temperature goes down three to five degrees lower than usual. Many places around the world get colder. La Niña usually lasts for about five months.
